The suspect gives his name as George Bell Sherman and claims that he is not an Italian; that he was born in Virginia. He was taken down to Vermillion Tuesday, and after being brought face to face with the boy upon whom the outrage was committed, the lad at once positively declared that he was not the man who tied him on the horse and then turned the horse loose. The boy not only declared that Sherman was not the man who did the terrible deed, but gave a description of the man who did mistreat him, which planly indicated that he was a much different appearing man than the one they held as the suspect.
